Definitions and Objectives of GEDSI Advocacy

GEDSI Advocacy in Disaster Management

Increase the resilience of vulnerable and marginalised groups to the impacts of disaster by ensuring that their rights and needs are addressed

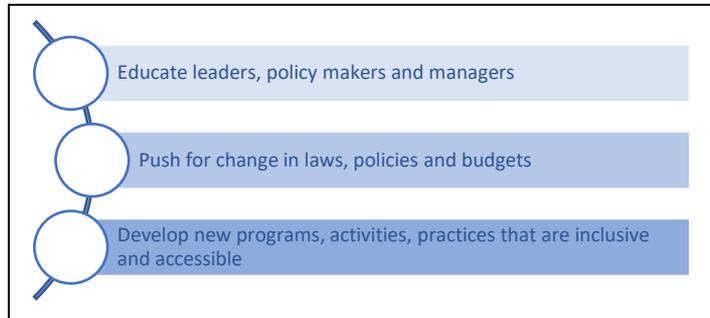

Empower vulnerable and marginalised groups to participate in disaster management initiatives

Influence public policy, regulations, and practice to build inclusive disaster management policies and practices

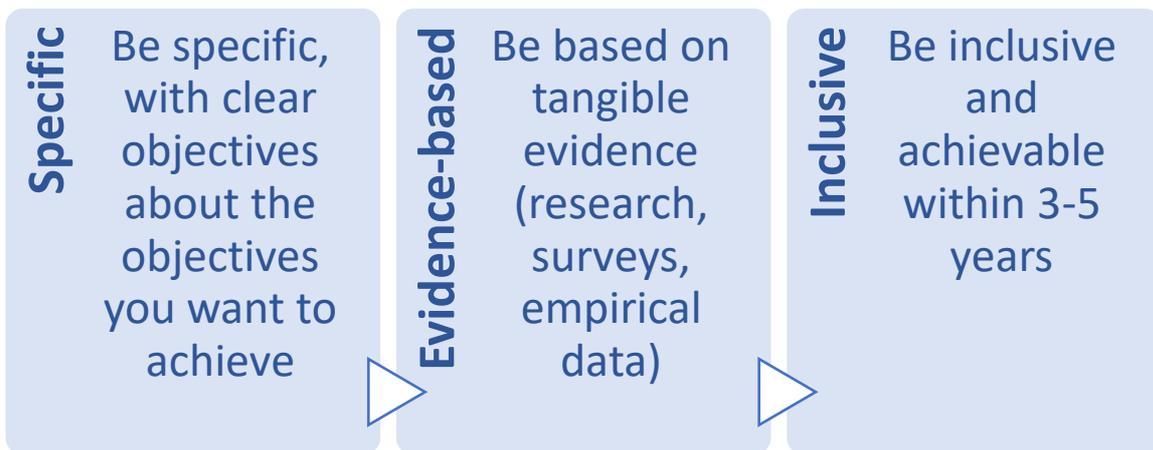

Advocacy Strategies and Processes

Advocacy Strategies

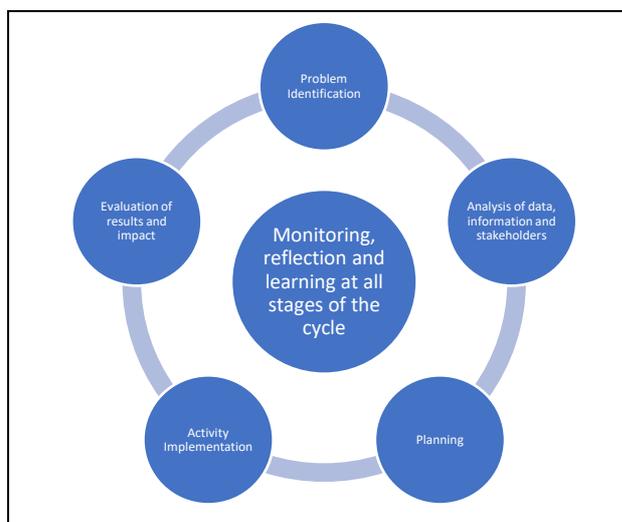

An advocacy strategy is like an activity or project monitoring strategy – it helps to define what you want to do, who you want to target, and how you will do it. Advocacy strategies can have several objectives.

Advocacy Messages

The Advocacy Cycle

Your organisation or project's advocacy strategy should be developed in line with the advocacy cycle to ensure the highest possibility for success.

Part 2: Designing and Implementing an Advocacy Strategy

In this section, you will find:

- ✓ Guidance on designing and implementing GEDSI advocacy initiatives in the disaster management sector
- ✓ Tips to ensure your GEDSI advocacy strategy is inclusive and participatory

Designing Your GEDSI Advocacy Strategy

Problem Identification

- Identify the problem you want to address through advocacy work. You can use SWOT analysis (Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats) or policy analysis to narrow down the problem(s) you want to focus on. Ask questions like which institutions are responsible for the policy, and what are the policy gaps related to the problem we want to address?

Research and Analysis

- Research the issue you want to focus on. What are your short term, medium term and long term objectives? Collect and analyse related qualitative and quantitative information on the issue vis-à-vis your objectives. Make sure you ask yourself questions that can help to identify the cause and effects of the particular problem you are trying to address. Brainstorm and elaborate possible solutions based on the objectives you want to achieve.
- Identify the sources of power who allow the problem to go unaddressed/remains entrenched/prefer business as usual. Whose interests are at stake if the problem is resolved? Whose interests are at stake if the problem goes unaddressed. Who are your potential champions/who has the power to influence change, that you can target to support your work? Who is the wider audience for your advocacy work.
- Define the roles and responsibilities of your team members, and those in your wider network who have agreed to support your work.

Planning

- Decide, and agree, on the necessary activities to achieve your short-, medium- and long-term objectives. Define the impact you want to achieve, and outcomes (possible changes) that will help determine if you are on track to achieve the objectives. What outputs (tangible results) will lead to your outcomes, and how will you measure success? Be sure the target audience for all activities, approaches to stakeholder engagement and the network needed to implement activities are all defined. Clarify any risks and assumptions.

Activity Implementation

- When implementing your advocacy activities, make sure you develop and commit to specific statements/messaging that can be communicated to target audiences clearly and easily. Messaging should include a description of and the proposed solutions to the issue you are addressing.
- Identify the appropriate media to communicate to target audiences. This can include a range of options such as media briefings, distributing flyers, public debates, conferences, radio or television announcements, community meetings and social media.
- Develop a plan for the implementation of activities and agree the timeline for implementation to coordinate with partners in your network who support your activities.

Monitoring and Learning

- Undertake continuous data collection to assess the progress of activity implementation (against your indicators of success) and determine if you are achieving any of your outcomes. Determine if there are any problems that need to be addressed, stakeholders that need to be included, or opportunities to take advantage of. Adjust your strategy and workplan accordingly.
- Share lessons on your successes and challenges to your team, network, and beneficiaries to ensure transparency as wider learning in the community.

Evaluation

- Collect and analyse information at the end of advocacy activities to determine if outputs and outcomes have been achieved, and whether your activities have had any impact or created momentum for change.

Tips to Ensure an Inclusive and Effective GEDSI Advocacy Strategy

Identify and analyze root causes of exclusion and/or discriminatory practices in disaster management

Understand the stakeholders you are targeting at different levels, and tailor your messages according to what they can influence

Engage vulnerable and marginalised groups in the design of your messaging and communication products to ensure the language and communication mediums are inclusive. Use disaggregated data and evidence to support the delivery of your message

Ensure your advocacy strategy utilises the knowledge of networks of vulnerable and marginalised groups, with representatives from those communities taking on leadership roles in the advocacy activities

Continually get feedback to identify unrecognised biases and address them. Use feedback to adapt your messages to respond to changes in context, stakeholders, and updated information received through monitoring and learning processes
